Aim & Objectives

The main aim of the Seminar was to share about opportunity to promote the diversity and variety of microorganisms

The objective of this event was to encourage everyone to recognize and celebrate the many ways microscopic organisms are important in human health, culture, economic activity, employment and, throughout our daily lives..

Main Venue- Virtual platform Using Microsoft Teams

Date: 18 September, 2021

Time: 11.30 AM – 1:00 PM

Participants- 195 students

Guest: Dr. K. S. Gomare,
Coordinator & Assistant Professor,
Department of Microbiology & Biotechnology, DSCL

The main subject of Dr. Komal’s talk was on the “Future Key and Scope for the Identifications of Microorganisms” by considering the sub discipline within biotechnology and microbiology. 17 September is International Microorganism Day, an opportunity to promote the diversity and variety of microorganisms and a way to encourage everyone to recognize and celebrate the many ways microscopic organisms are important in human health, culture and, throughout our daily lives.

Microorganisms are often just known for causing diseases in animals and plants or spoiling our food, but these tiny organisms contain so many benefits for us, some of which we do not even know about yet! Microbes, such as bacteria and fungi, have been proven to be beneficial for our health and bodies, our food, medicines and even our environment. For example, it has recently been discovered that certain microorganisms are able to degrade polluting compounds that are found in the waste generated during coffee production, and convert them into electricity. Microorganisms therefore prevent these pollutants from entering water courses and contaminate the environment – without these microorganisms, our environment would be very different! The essential role of microorganisms in our environment should be recognized, which is why on the 17th of September we celebrate International Microorganism Day!
